The goal of this presentation is to identify the current struggles facing children. It will review some of the current stressors in detail, including recent results from a national survey on youth violence and substance use. Normal developmental milestones and differentiating factors between "teenage angst" and youth struggling worsening depression or suicidal thoughts will be detailed. Strategies for assessing risk factors and suicidal ideation in youth will be illustrated. In conclusion, the presentation describes current limitations with behavioral health care for youth along with strategies to improve access to proper care moving forward.

Target Audience

This activity is intended for physicians, nurses, psychologists, social workers, counselors other mental health professionals.

Learning Objectives

1. Demonstrate challenges facing youth in the digital age, including increasing access to technology and social media.
2. Review differences between normal development in teenagers/young adults and signs of worsening depression in youth.
3. Review tips for communicating with youth and assessing internet/technology use, including assessing for cyberbullying and suicidal thoughts/actions.

TAKE COURSE

Mandating adherence to mental health treatment in the community is among the most contested human rights issues in mental health law. While most American jurisdictions have statutes nominally authorizing involuntary outpatient commitment—a legal order to adhere to prescribed treatment in the community—until recently few states made substantial use of these laws.

With the enactment of assisted outpatient treatment (AOT) in New York in 1999, in California in 2003, and in Florida, Michigan, and West Virginia in 2005, and the tragic deaths at Virginia Tech in the wake of a failed outpatient commitment order, policy interest in this topic has dramatically increased. In addition, Congress has stimulated interest in AOT by authorizing SAMHSA to offer AOT implementation grants to states. AOT can best be understood in the context of a broad movement to apply available "leverage" to induce people with serious mental disorder to become engaged in treatment.

This lecture will review the empirical literature on the effectiveness of the assisted outpatient treatment in the US, alongside the heated controversies about its use. We will also review research in New York to evaluate the effectiveness and cost impact of Kendra's Law, the largest and most intensively operationalized AOT program in the US.

TARGET AUDIENCE

This activity is intended for physicians, nurses, psychologists, social workers, counselors and mental health professionals.
